Now I'm Trading Cryptocurrencies... For All of Us

I've always said that most trading services are crap. It doesn't matter what they trade: stocks, options, bonds, futures... And that's the truth about almost every cryptocurrency trading service I've ever seen, no doubt. They take credit when the digital dollars are rising, but when things are getting killed, too bad for you.

So, when I was introduced to yet another service several months ago, I almost didn't take notice. But after looking through this group's method and track record, I got interested. Don't get me wrong, it's no safe haven like TLT or ZROZ (cryptos are about as far out as you can get on the risk scale), but it has possibilities.

You know I've been saying that Bitcoin could crash by year-end and could even see an ultimate low by January 2023. But in this system, instead of buying whatever looks hot, the group trades among Ether, Bitcoin, and the U.S. dollar. If there's no positive momentum in the cryptos, the system moves to the buck, which keeps investors on the sidelines until there's something to do. So, if Bitcoin makes a major bottom, there still might be a way to make gains. If not, then the system is supposed to sit in cash. That makes sense to me.

A few weeks back, I put a little of my own money in the system to get a feel for it. That said, I'm not ready to "go live." Instead, I'll let my own investment ride so that you can see the real results as they unfold, no matter what happens. If it turns out great, then you can make your own decisions about it. If I lose my money, it'll suck but will be better than rolling out something for you that's not quite ready for prime time.

This year, the system kept investors in the dollar for months, just waiting for an opportunity. In fact, when I invested, the system was in cash. We got our first signal on Monday, September 12. In the months ahead, I'll keep you updated about how it's going. If it goes well, we might roll it out into the late winter or early spring.
