The S&P 500 Opportunity Most Investors Will Completely Miss in 2026

Here’s a truth almost nobody is talking about: the S&P 500 looks strong. Headlines scream record highs. Everyone feels smart.

But the average stock inside it has been quietly left behind. Ignored. Overlooked. Forgotten.

For years, a handful of mega-cap giants have dominated returns. Meanwhile, hundreds of smaller, fundamentally solid companies have lagged. Valuations are low. Potential is high. And most investors haven’t noticed.

That sets the stage for 2026.

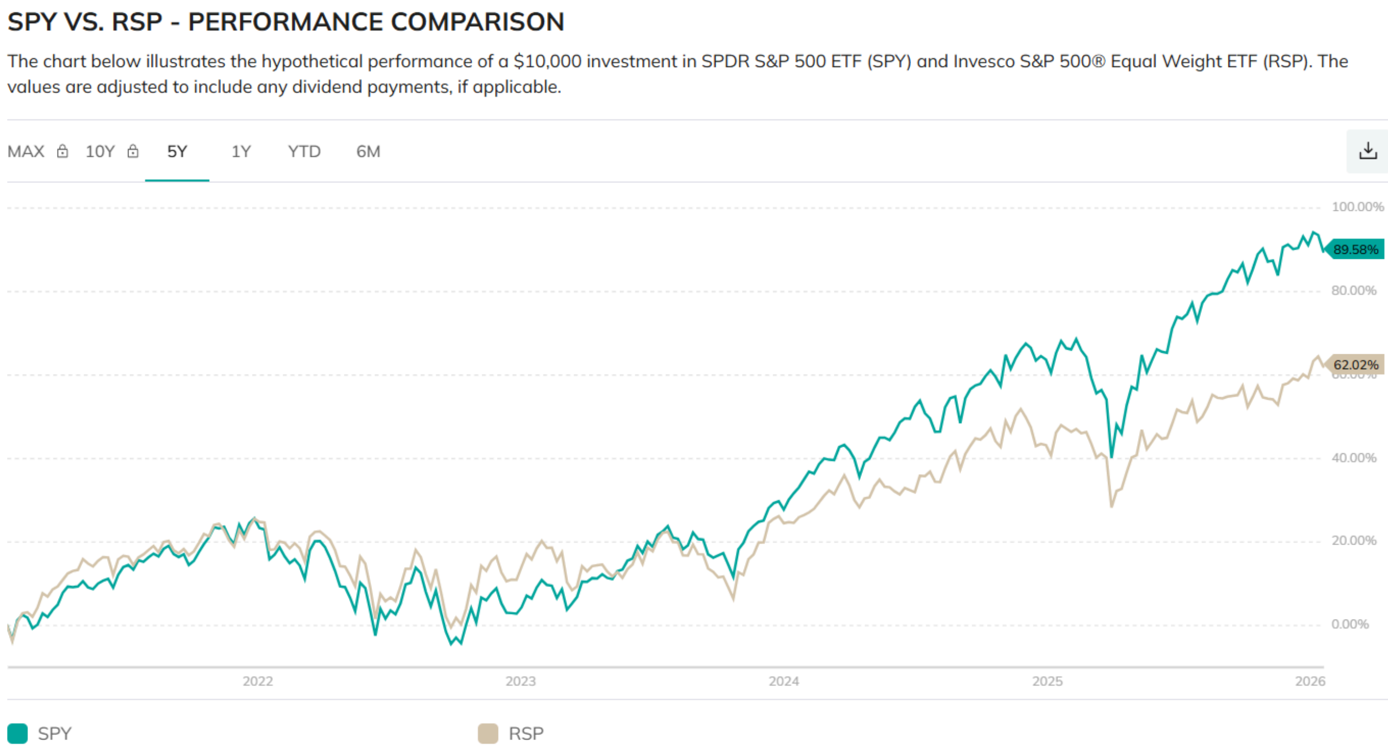
History proves it: when market leadership becomes too concentrated, the next wave of returns comes from the neglected stocks—the ones nobody wants. The “average” stocks.

Think back to the Dot Com boom or the Nifty Fifty. Where are those stocks today? Remember when GE brought good things to life and was the most valuable company in the world? You couldn’t go wrong buying IBM either.

That hasn’t worked out too well in the recent cycle.

Most investors will miss this. Why? Because humans follow the visible, the familiar, the “safe.” They chase headlines. They follow the herd. And when the herd moves, the opportunity has already passed.

The average stock has lagged. Badly. Take a look at this chart below. It shows that the S&P 500 (SPY) has generated about 27% more return than the equal-weighted S&P 500 (RSP) over the past five years.



These spreads close. Especially when there is heavy concentration in the S&P 500. As I noted last week, the top 10 stocks represent 40% of the index.

You have two ways to play it:

Option 1: RSP, the equal-weighted S&P 500.

This is simple. Safe. Effective. Every stock gets an equal voice. When the average stock finally outperforms, RSP benefits. No guesswork. No analysis. Just broad exposure to the rotation.

Option 2: FAST Profits.

This is the high-leverage, strategic approach. Instead of owning everything—including the landmines—you focus only on the stocks most likely to outperform. No hype. No guesswork. Just a system built on 25 years of forensic accounting experience, previously used to advise billion-dollar investment funds.

Here’s the kicker: periods like this hide risk. Many “cheap” stocks are only cheap on paper. Aggressive accounting. Stretched balance sheets. One-time gimmicks. Most investors will buy them anyway. And most will lose.

FAST Profits avoids those traps. My Forensic Accounting Stock Tracker ranks 1,500 stocks by upside potential and hidden risk. It shows you exactly where to be invested—and what to avoid. You don’t need a CPA. You don’t need to read footnotes. The system does the heavy lifting.

The proof is clear: the top eight stocks in FAST Profits have delivered three times the return of the S&P 500.

And here's the urgency: the first 25 subscribers will get the entire ranked list of 1,500 stocks—a resource valued at $25,000—for just $597.

The rotation is coming. The herd will be late. By the time everyone realizes, the best opportunities will be gone.

You can play it safe with RSP, quietly benefiting when the average stock catches up. Or you can take control with FAST Profits, positioning yourself ahead of the crowd.

Opportunities like this don't wait. Markets move fast. And the window to get in front of this rotation is closing—right now.

Subscribe to FAST Profits today—and don't be the investor left on the sidelines watching others collect the gains.
